We already know that mutations in cancer genes like BRCA1 and BRCA2 increase cancer risk. But now David Thomas at the Garvan Institute of Medical Research in Sydney and his colleagues have shown for the first time that: Mutations in genes associated with a lower cancer risk can little by little add up to an even deadlier effect. [A] The team compared the genetic profiles of healthy individuals with those of 1162 people with sarcomas – cancers that develop in bones and soft tissue and disproportionately affect young people. In particular, they focused on 72 genes – some strongly linked to sarcoma, like the TP53 gene, and others that are only weakly linked. As they expected, a mutation in the TP53 gene increased a person's sarcoma risk – half developed cancer by the age of 32. But people with mutations in two genes only weakly associated with sarcoma developed tumours at a younger age – half had cancer by the age of 25. This effect was even stronger in those who had three or more mutations in such genes. [B]

"Cancer is a disease where you accumulate stepwise genetic variants," says Thomas. "This means that the more genetic variation you carry, the earlier in life you're likely to develop it." [C] Looking across multiple genes should allow cancers to be detected sooner, before they become fatal, says Thomas. It may one day become routine to screen people for high-risk combinations of mutations in genes previously considered to have little relevance to cancer risk. Thomas's team is now offering whole body MRI scans to people with mutations like these in their DNA, to see if there is any early evidence of sarcoma. "We're picking up cancers that are asymptomatic in people who carry these types of genetic variants, and because they're in the early stages, we can actually cure them." [D] Using this method to diagnose cancer early could also help to spot the disease in relatives of patients, says Vivek Bhadri at the University of Sydney. "Once a diagnosis has been made, screening has the potential to identify other as yet unaffected relatives who could then be offered prospective surveillance imaging, such as whole body MRI, with the aim of identifying tumours at an early stage," he says

- 27. What best paraphrases the bolded sentence in the passage?
- A. Low-risk genes have now been proven to be related to cancer.
- B. Multiple mutations in lower-risk genes can eventually be more dangerous than high-risk mutations.
- C. Genes that are only weakly linked to cancer may together increase its likelihood.

- D. Cancer risk is only significant when high-risk genes like BRCA1 or BRCA2 are mutated.
- 28. According to paragraph 2, which factor may increase sarcoma risk?
- A. BRCA1 and BRCA2 mutations
- B. Healthy individuals with strong immune systems
- C. Mutations in multiple genes weakly associated with sarcoma
- D. Young age at diagnosis
- 29. What is the word "accumulate" in paragraph 3 closest in meaning to?
- A. appear suddenly
- B. build up gradually
- C. fall apart
- D. carry naturally
- 30. Why does the author mention people who had two or three mutations in weakly linked genes in paragraph 2?
- A. To demonstrate that multiple low-risk mutations can lead to earlier cancer development
- B. To show that low-risk mutations are harmless on their own
- C. To suggest that sarcoma is only dangerous when caused by many mutations
- D. To explain how common these mutations are in healthy people
- 31. What is the main idea of paragraph 4?
- A. Methods to cure cancer completely
- B. Benefits of early diagnosis and screening for people with certain mutations
- C. Relationship between MRI scans and general health
- D. Genetic mutations are always asymptomatic
- 32. In which space (marked A, B, C and D) will the following sentence fit in?
- "This indicates that having more mutations, even in low-risk genes, can significantly raise one's vulnerability to sarcoma."
- A. [A]

B. [B]

C. [C]

D. [D]

- 33. What is the best title for the passage?
- A. Sarcoma: The Youthful Cancer
- B. Hidden Genetic Risks in Cancer Development
- C. The Role of TP53 in Cancer Progression
- D. Using MRI to Treat Cancer
- 34. What best describes the tone of this passage?
- A. Alarmist

- B. Informative
- C. Dismissive
- D. Concerning
